

Gender and Interaction
SOC-S 660 (32294) and GNDR-G 701 (35797)
Fall 2016

Professor Cate Taylor, Sociology and Gender Studies

This graduate seminar will examine gendered interactions, with a focus on the social psychological perspective. We will examine how the interactional level of gender contributes to, and reproduces, social inequality. We will also think about the ways that gender at the interactional level reinforces and reproduces gender at the individual and institutional levels. We will cover some basic principles of social psychology as well as do an overview of gender as a multi-level social phenomenon. We will think about the ways that gender intersects with other axes of inequality,

